Because resort developers in Sin City are constantly trying to outdo one another with each new property, it's always easy to find one that complements every taste. From ultra modern to neoclassical and all backed by dedicated service, you'll have some sweet suites to recommend to clients.

Palms Place

The recently opened Palms Place (www.palmsplace.com) at The Palms Casino Resort (www.palms.com) is located in what many believe to be one of the coolest, hippest resorts in Las Vegas. Renowned for its off-the-wall nightlife and penchant for attracting twenty-something celebrities, the ultra-chic Palms Place is for those clients that like to indulge in the hedonism, but retire to an ultra-luxe and toned-down environment. (For more on Palms Place and owner George Maloof, Jr., see this issue's cover story beginning on page 50.)

The Penthouse Suites are worthy of the hype; No. 302 on the 58th floor wins the gold star with a pool table, two bedrooms and 360-degree balcony views. They've become extremely popular with celebrities, attracting such notables as Jessica Simpson, Britney Spears, Pete Wentz and Lauren Conrad.

When it comes to luxury suites, there might be more of a choice in this neon jungle than anywhere else in the world.

In the Fantasy Tower at Palms, there are some amazing specialty suites, including the Hardwood Suite, which features an actual basketball court, and the Real World Suite, which was featured in the ubiquitous MTV reality series. Other themed suites include the King Pin Suite, which features a bowling alley, and the Hugh Hefner Sky Villa, which, at $40,000 per night, gives fortunate guests peerless Strip views from a cantilevered Jacuzzi pool.
